The cost per student has increased 1% per year in inflation-corrected dollars, but only 0.1% per year when corrected for demographics.

Fairfax County ranks seventh of the ten Washington-Area school systems in total compensation.

The increase in school expenditures is due to the sharp increase in the number of ESOL and FRM students because these students are assigned additional teachers.

Individual teachers receive salary increases at a rate that exceeds what private-sector workers receive.

Approximately 60% of the teachers are classroom teachers; 20% are special-education teachers.
